

From Sarah Brown McCulloch's Guilford: A Walking Guide (2012):

Alfred G. Hull, 58-60 Boston Street, Italianate, 1849; French Second Empire, c1860.

Built in the Italianate style with arched dormers, polygonal bays, and bracketed porch, this house was later remodeled by adding a mansard roof to the nearly flat roof of the French Second Empire style. Notice the charming little conservatory built into an angle of the west wing. It was certainly a house befitting a pillar of the church and an outstanding citizen. Hull was the first vice-president of The Guilford Savings Bank, town treasurer, a justice and a deacon of the Third Congregational Church from 1852 until his death in 1894.
